Thank you to everyone who joined us this week for Parent-Teacher Conferences. Your attendance and support of what the Swallow Team is doing each day with your children is so very appreciated. We hope that you found the information shared at conferences to be beneficial in allowing you to know where your child is at academically and where the next steps for continued growth will be.

In passing through conferences this week, I have heard families asking 'what can we be doing at home to help our child in their skills.' There are so many ways to make skill development fun and engaging so that your child does not feel like they are doing 'extra work.' I have included some ideas below.

Math: How many math facts can you solve before the light turns green?

When grocery shopping, practice the 'dollar up' strategy

License plate game: add/subtract/multiply the numbers on license plate.

Identify the number (single digit to multidigit)

Reading: Alphabet hunt on billboards/road signs. First one to 'z' wins.

Put letters on license plates in alphabetical order

Read the same book as your child and have a reading journal with back and forth dialogue about the book.
